A Night Session Held by the House, Which Has Hard Work to Secure a Quorum.

House Substitute for Council Bill Relating to Steam Boiler Inspectors Passes the House.

The Bill for the Appointment of a Mine Inspector Passes the Council as Amended.

It required a night session of the house in order to relieve it from the press of business which had accumulated, but the council, which held an evening session Tuesday, was satisfied with the business transacted during the forenoon and afternoon. The council spent a considerable portion of their time to killing or scotching house bills. The mine inspector bill was reported back from the council committee with the recommendation that it pass as amended. The bill to provide for safety of passengers traveling by rail was discussed in committee of the whole, and was filed for further consideration. The house substitute for ouncil bill No. 1, relating to inspectors of steam boilers, passed the house by a vote of fifteen to seven. The bill to establish a hospital for the insane was recommended for passage, as was the bill relating to toll roads, toll bridges and toll ferry boats. The bill relating to locating and recording mineral claims is still in the house.

THE COUNCIL.

Council met at 10 a. m., all members present. Hoffman presented a petition from thirty citizens of White Sulphur Spring, relative to mineral lands in odd sections claimed by the Northern Pacific. Hatch, from the committee on territorial affairs, reported back the bill concerning licenses, recommending its passage. Passed to general orders.

Silver Bow Thompson, of the ways and means committee, returned council No. 54, to reimburse sheriffs for board of prisoners, and house bill No. 42, requiring county treasurers to advertise in newspapers a list of warrants they have funds to redeem, without recommendation. Passed to gen-orders.

Olds reported back the mine inspector bill with the recommendation that it pass as amended. Also the petitions of 684 citizens, praying that the legislature memorialize congress in relation to the mineral lands claimed by the railroads in Montana, and submitted council joint memorial No. 15 for passage. Rules were suspended, the memorial read and placed on general orders.

Bickford, of the select committee on the registration bill recommended that the council recede from its amendment, the same providing "that the registers of election might hear evidence to determine the qualification of electors." The report was adopted.

House bill No. 43, relating to the codification of the laws, was under consideration when the committee arose.

Council resumed and, on motion of Middleton, the mineral land memorial was read third time and passed by a unanimous wote, kennedy absent.

After roll call, with Kennedy absent, the order of business was suspended and council went into committee of the whole, Bickford in the chair. House bill No. 43 was taken up again. Middleton believing this to be a very important measure, on account of the amount of money involved and for other reasons, moved that it be referred to a special committee to consult with local lawyers and see if $4,000 was an exorbitant price for the work; the committee to report in the morning. The motion prevailed.

House bill No. 52, to close certain business houses on Sunday, was reported correctly printed and referred to the elections and territorial affairs committee. House bill No. 56, relating to the committee reported correctly printed and referred to the incorporations committee.

If business men couldn't find time to collect accounts in that long period he thought they should lose them, and he asked that the bill be dropped.

Middleton didn't like this way of cutting the neck off every house bill which came into the council. He said the bill had some merit and the house displayed sense in passing it. He thought the time should be extended, as proposed in the bill, in view of the fact that at the last resort witnesses might not be found to testify as to the debt. Thompson, of Silver Bow, related some of his actual experience and thought the bill should pass. It gave business men a chance to continue judgment after the debtor who may have become insolvent, an opportunity to collect his old accounts after the debtor had once more got on his feet.

Thompson's motion was put to a vote and lost by a tie vote, the chair voting in the substitute to council bill. No. 37, relating to district court stenographers, passed unanimously. The house substitute to council bill No.

House bill No. 27, relating to county treasurers was next on the calendar, but it met the same fate of the other house measures which came before the committee during the day's sitting. After the clerk had read section I, Hoffman moved that section I be rejected, which would kill the bill.

Middleton said that in view of the fact that county treasurers were required to give a heavy bond, he didn't think such restrictions as the bill required should be placed on them, in the matter of depositing the funds, He moved to amend by recommending that the bill do not pass. The motion unanimously prevailed.

Thompson was surprised that the gentleman should stand up to defend himself of something of which no one had yet accused him. He still had reason to insist on the merits of the bill.

Bickford then resumed his seat in the committee and called Hatch to the chair. Bickford then took the floor and made a lengthy speech in favor of the bill.

Middleton, in the meantime, had said the bill was an absurdity, since it provided a fine of $1 a month for the refusal of a railroad to fence in its road.

bill was an absurdity, since it provided a fine of si a month for the refusal of a railroad to fence in its road.

Bickford said the bill had been in the hands of a select committee for the purpose of remedying it so as to avoid the existing difficulty in enforcing the law. From time to time, in all the states and territories, the supreme courts had decided that only a penal law could compel a railroad to pay damages. This was the very kind of a law the bill now under discussion provided for. The bill, as it is, would be a protection to the farmers of Missoula, Deer Lodge, Beaverhead and other western counties. It would in no wise effect the eastern cattle counties. Railroad corporations were becoming mightier than the state. He had no ill will for railroad companies. God bless them, he said, they give me a pass every now and then, which I immediately place in the fire. By imposing a trivial fine, the real object is to be attained, to place the proof of the burden of negligence on the company, that the farmer may get the value of the animal killed. It is not right that the legislature should sit idle and see the people imposed upon when it is within our power to remedy the evil.

Cole said he was friendly to the railroads but more so to the farmers. He said railroads were the most important factor in opening the territory. He did not believe Montana had reached the time when such a law should be enacted.

Bickford resumed his seat. A motion to indefinitely postpone was lost on a tie vote. A motion to adopt section 1 was also lost on a tie vote. A motion to file for further consideration prevailed.

The committee then arose and reported to the council as directed. House bill No. 43 was referred to Middleton, Thompson, of Deer Lodge, and Hoffman; house bill No. 47, passed to third reading; house bill No. 20, referred to the engrossing committee; house bill No. 15, passed to third reading.

A motion to adjourn was lost. House bill No. 37, concerning the appointment of court stenographers, was read first and second times; also house bill No. 33, to prevent swine from running at large. Referred to the proper committees.

House substitute for council bill No. 1, the boiler inspection bill, was read by the clerk, ne one paying any attention but Thompson and Kennedy. It passed to general orders and council adjourned, after several unsuccessful efforts, at 5 o'clock.

Middleton doubted the power of the legislature to pass a law of the kind. He said it was only intended to govern the Montana Union passing through Deer Lodge county. It would not work in Custer county. A band of cowboys would break down the fence whenever they wanted to pass. He wanted the legislature to wait until statehood was had and then they could adopt all the special legislation that was wanted and require any particular road to fence in its tracks.

Thompson, of Deer Lodge, admitted the bill was deceptive in its title as it was intended to protect owners of live stock. He doubted, however, reverting to Middleton's last statement, whether future state legislatures would pass this kind of a bill, hinting that railroad corporations were mighty and would use every means to defeat a measure in which their franchises were at stake.

The next to come before the committee was house bill No. 34, to amend sections 1477, 1478, 1479, 1483, 1484, 1485 and 1486 of the fifth division of the compiled statutes, relating to locating and recording mining Swiggett moved to strike out the section, relating to requirements of loca-tion, being of the opinion that it was cov-ered by the United States laws. Haskell explained that the object of the law was to make more specific and plain the laws of the United States on the subject and that the section was not in conflict with the laws of the United States.

Saxton appeared on the floor in time to enquire into the title of the bill. Davis came in a few moments after it had passed. Saxton explained his absence by saying that he had been invited out to supper and being the first equare meal he had for some time he took advantage of the opportunity and consequently came in late. tion of the substitute, and explained that it was based on a system in use in several of the states. The judge in open court appoints three disinterested citizens of the county, together with the county clerk and probate judge, who first take an oath to faithfully perform their duties. They select the names of twenty persons as grand jurors as the county commissioners do under the present law. They then put the twenty names into an envelope and seal it up and bring it into open court and hand it to the judge, who writes across it where the envelope is sealed "grand jurors for—county."

the envelope is sealed "grand jurors for county."

The petit jurors are selected by taking three hundred names from the assessment roll and placing them on slips and shaking them up. Thirty slips are then drawn and also sealed up in an envelope. These are are opened by the clerk of the district court in the presence of the sheriff and district judge and the jurors summoned as under the present law. The jury commissioners receive $1$ and actual mileage for their services.

Mantle favored the substitute and denounced the present system of drawing jurors.
